QUEENS PEACE PALACE

THE SELF-WORTH RECLAMATION

A Guided Reflection for Separating Your Worth
from Performance, Approval & Comparison

REMEMBER. RECLAIM. RECEIVE.

TO THY OWN SELF BE TRUE

The Inner Work Collection

Before You Begin

A self-worth wound can show up as the persistent feeling that you are not enough, not lovable, or somehow required to earn the right to be valued. It can appear through comparison, people-pleasing, weak boundaries, self-sabotaging patterns, distrust of your own desires or intuition, and the constant need to prove yourself.

The original Queens Peace Palace worksheet centered those exact themes. This edition keeps that heart while moving deeper: not only asking whether you value yourself, but exploring what you learned to use as proof of your value - and what happens when that proof disappears.

> This workbook is not asking you to become more impressive.
> It is asking you to notice where you have confused achievement, attention, usefulness, beauty, approval or perfection with worth.

A note on support

This workbook is for personal reflection and education. It is not therapy, diagnosis, or crisis care. If these reflections bring up experiences that feel overwhelming or difficult to manage alone, consider support from a licensed mental-health professional or another qualified provider.

YOUR INTENTION

What would change in your life if you no longer needed to prove that you were worthy?

What have you been using to measure your worth?

Worth can become attached to external evidence so gradually that we stop noticing the bargain we have made with ourselves: I am enough when...

I tend to feel most valuable when I am...

- ■ Achieving or being productive
- ■ Needed by other people
- ■ Chosen, desired or pursued
- ■ Praised or validated
- ■ Making money or succeeding
- ■ Looking a certain way
- ■ Being easy, agreeable or useful
- ■ Taking care of everyone else
- ■ Doing everything correctly
- ■ Other: _____

Finish the sentence: "I feel like I am not enough when…"

Whose approval has historically had the most power over how you see yourself?

Where did you learn what made you valuable?

The point is not to assign blame. It is to notice the messages, relationships and experiences that helped shape your internal definition of worth.

Growing up, I felt most praised, safe, loved or accepted when I...

I felt criticized, ignored, rejected or "not enough" when I...

What did younger you begin to believe you had to be in order to deserve love, belonging or approval?

Palace Reflection
A belief can feel deeply personal and still be something you learned. Learned does not mean permanent.

Where are you performing for your own worth?

The original worksheet named the need to prove yourself repeatedly as a sign of wounded self-worth. This page is about finding the places where that pattern is still collecting evidence.

Where in your life do you feel like you have to earn your seat at the table?

What do you overdo, overgive, overexplain, tolerate or perfect because part of you fears that simply being yourself will not be enough?

What are you exhausted from proving?

Someone else's value does not reduce yours.

Comparison often turns another person's beauty, success, relationships, gifts or progress into evidence against ourselves. But two people can be valuable at the same time. Someone else having something does not create a verdict about you.

Who or what tends to trigger comparison in you?

When you compare, what do you usually decide their life says about yours?

What quality do you admire in them that you can honor, develop or express in your own way - without becoming them?

Name five things about yourself that do not need comparison to be meaningful.

Can you receive without immediately arguing with it?

The original worksheet asked you to remember compliments, talents and reasons you deserve love. Here we take that further by noticing whether goodness can actually land when it reaches you.

The best compliment I have received - and why it mattered - was...

A gift, strength or quality I often minimize is...

When someone genuinely appreciates me, my first instinct is to...

What would it look like to simply say “thank you” and let appreciation be true?

Receiving practice:
For the next week, when you receive a sincere compliment, resist the urge to reject, explain away, compare or return it immediately. Notice what happens inside you.

Who are you when nothing is being earned?

Self-worth becomes more stable when it is not dependent on a perfect day, a productive week, someone's attention, a relationship status or an impressive outcome.

If I could not mention my job, accomplishments, appearance, relationship status or what I do for other people, I would describe myself as...

Three qualities I value in myself that cannot be measured by productivity are...

Five things I did right recently - no matter how small - are...

What part of yourself deserves more respect from YOU?

Listen to the way you speak to yourself.

Your original Self Worth worksheet included an apology to yourself and encouraged compassion toward your younger self. That remains powerful: self-respect is not only what you believe about yourself; it is also how you treat yourself after mistakes.

What is the harshest recurring thought you have about yourself?

If someone you deeply loved said that exact thing about themselves, what would you tell them?

Now say it to yourself.

Write a short apology to yourself for a time you abandoned, criticized or betrayed your own needs.

Speak from worth, not toward it.

Affirmations were a major part of the original worksheet. The new goal is not to repeat something until you become worthy. It is to practice language that reflects worth you are no longer negotiating.

“I do not have to earn the right to respect myself.”

“I can be a work in progress and still be worthy of love.”

“My gifts deserve room without comparison.”

“I can receive without proving, performing or overgiving.”

“My boundaries do not make me less lovable.”

“Success can expand my life without defining my value.”

Write three statements that address YOUR specific worth story.

1.

2.

3.

What changes when worth is the starting point?

The most important shift is not merely feeling better about yourself. It is making different decisions because you no longer believe you must abandon yourself to be loved, accepted or successful.

If I truly believed I was worthy, I would stop...

I would start...

I would ask for...

I would no longer tolerate...

One action I can take this week that reflects self-worth is...

THE PALACE CHECK-IN

Do not ask only, “Do I feel confident today?” Ask: “Did I make at least one decision that treated me like someone whose needs, desires, time and voice matter?”

RETURN TO YOURSELF

You were never supposed to audition for your own worth.

You can grow, heal, improve, apologize, learn and become more aligned without turning your humanity into evidence that you are deficient.

Remember:
Your worth is not the prize at the end of perfect healing. Let it be the place you begin.

Need support going deeper?

If this reflection uncovered something you would like support navigating, Queens Peace Palace offers private Spiritual Life Coaching for clarity, self-trust, relationships, transitions and personal growth.

queenspeacepalace.com

TO THY OWN SELF BE TRUE

Queens Peace Palace | The Inner Work Collection